WHEREAS, the original bill known as the Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors Act also called the DREAM Act has been reintroduced in Congress in 2013; and

WHEREAS, for thousands of young adults raised in this country, who were brought to the U.S. by their parents without proper documentation, current laws continue to keep their dreams for a future out of reach; and

Whereas, for them, pursuing a college education and a career isn't just a matter of working hard and achieving academically. Instead, they face many roadblocks in their path to success: a crushing financial burden, discriminatory enrollment policies, and the constantly looming threat of deportation; and

WHEREAS, the DREAM Act, would give undocumented young people the chance to overcome these obstacles by providing a clear path to citizenship, and the ability to attend public universities at an affordable rate; and

WHEREAS, the DREAM would allow states to charge in-state tuition rates to all resident students, regardless of immigration status; and

WHEREAS, only those who were brought to the U.S. at the age of 15 or younger have lived in this country for at least five years, have good moral character, have graduated from high school or obtained a GED, and who attend either college or military service for at least two years, would be eligible for citizenship. Those who meet these rigid eligibility requirements have truly demonstrated their commitment to building a life in the U.S.; and

WHEREAS, with the recently enacted State DREAM Act awaiting the signature of Governor Christie, we must remember the urgency of this legislation for so many young people. The DREAM Act is the only hope in sight for many talented young immigrants. For many of them, every day without this legislation is a day marked with uncertainty.

STATEMENT
